Dear Sir/Madam:

This response is in reply to the ambiguous and illegibly written office action mailed on January 31, 2005. We have one month to submit a corrected filing. We do not understand what the problem was with the original filing of the response because the office action contained an illegibly handwritten note without any guidance as to how to correct the alleged defect. Moreover, we made sure the remarks were on the first page until the signature line, and the claims were on a separate distinct page. That format has been acceptable in the past, why not now? We attempted to contact the legal instruments examiner to determine what the objection was. We did not receive a return phone call about the alleged submission in a timely manner. Rather than waste time, we filed this response and hopefully it complies with the USPTO's vague, indefinite and ever-changing rules.

The remarks begin on page 2, and the claims can be found at page 5.
